Domestic and national flying car 'Tusi' attracted great attention in TEKNOFEST

SEPTEMBER 24, 2019

TEKNOFEST, where thousands of technological products are released, ended. One of the vehicles that attracted the attention of people who keen on the technology was Tusi, a domestic and national flying car developed by university engineers.

Aerospace and Technology Festival (Teknofest), organized this year for the second time and bringing together thousands of people who keen on the technology, brought together interesting technological vehicles. Istanbul Gelisim University (IGU), took place as a participant in the fair conducted in the Ataturk Airport in September, 17 - 22, the attracted the attention with its flying car. Engineers attended the fair with a rocket, flying car and an armed unmanned aerial vehicle, and informed the visitors about the machines during the fair.

Incoming students studying in Germany, Poland, Spain, Northern Macedonia, Romania and Bulgaria will experience the Turkish higher education at Istanbul Gelisim University.

Are the historic buildings in Istanbul at risk?

SEPTEMBER 27, 2019

Civil Engineer Assist. Prof. Dr. Ali Etemadi, stating that the maximum damage would be to the unreinforced masonry buildings and walls among the Istanbul's historic buildings in the event of a possible major earthquake, said: "Unreinforced historic masonry buildings are more endangered. On the other hand, in the design or construction of structures that have been provided engineering (or structural strengthening) service in more important structures such as Hagia Sophia, measures have been taken and a better act can be expected. However, all of them need to be re-examined and reinforced with today's technologies."

After the earthquake of 5.8 in Istanbul yesterday, 473 buildings were damaged. Eyes have been turned to the historic structures in Istanbul as well as the buildings. Civil Engineer Assist. Prof. Dr. Ali Etemadi said that historical buildings can be affected more because of the nature of non-ductile act and their heavy mass.
