Expert warns: Do not confuse growth pain with rheumatic diseases

OCTOBER 02, 2019

Stating that there are big changes and developments in the children bodies with the adolescence, Physiotherapist İlknur Atkin said that growth pain in children should not be confused with rheumatic diseases.

The body adaptation process in children starts with puberty. Physiotherapist İlknur Atkin, stating that this process affects both families and children, said that the changes in the body bring new problems and differences in each child psychologically and physically. Mentioning that bone and muscle tissues develop rapidly and increase in length occurs at the stage where development reaches the maximum point in adolescence, Physiotherapist İlknur Atkin added: "During getting longer, the child's psychology, quality of life and social status are involved as a factor. The biggest complaint of children to families is especially the growth pain in this period."

A new approach to the inflation-interest rate debate

Istanbul Gelisim University Assist. Prof. Dr. Gülgün Çiğdem has brought a new dimension to the harsh debate between economists and politicians about the relation of inflation and interest rate nowadays where the independence of Central Banks is questioned and the recessionist process is discussed with her empirical study published in the US.

Pointing out that the debate about the relation between inflation and interest and which is the cause, which is the result began in the 1700's, Assist. Prof. Dr. Gülgün Çiğdem from Istanbul Gelisim University said: "These debates are thought to started with Fisher in 1930. Although Fisher formulated the relation between these two macro-economic variables and brought them to the science world with naming it the Fisher Effect, these debates actually started with William Douglas in 1730."
