How should teachers communicate well with their students?

SEPTEMBER 9

Emphasizing that the teacher should give equal right of answer to each student in order to encourage the whole class to success, Asst. Prof. Dr. Derya Kavgaoğlu said, "For this, if necessary, it should change the style of addressing, the way of asking questions, and express the student in a way that he/she understands."

Asst. Prof. Dr. Derya Kavgaoğlu from Istanbul Gelisim University made statements about how teachers should communicate with their students in a healthy way. Asst. Prof. Dr. Derya Kavgaoğlu said: "If the teacher has a habit of both asking and answering the question, it leaves a very depressing effect on the students. The student of a teacher who has this habit does not dare to express it even if he knows the answer to the question. Because he is sure that he will not be given the right to speak. It is also difficult to encourage the student in this situation to express what he knows. As long as the teacher continues to behave in this way, the student's negative behaviors such as not being able to express himself - not being able to express himself, silence, staying passive also reinforce."
